Dear Dr. Adams:

I would like to introduce myself to you as recent University of Southern California School of Dentistry graduate and potential partner. I was raised in this part of southern California and upon academic success, received a scholarship to the USC School of Dentistry to earn my dental degree. In high school, I recognized my passion for medicine and I believe it was my competitive spirit that allowed me to succeed in my academics, specifically sciences. During this period, I began shadowing dentists and quickly fell in love with the practice. I then pivoted my focus on getting the necessary grades to apply to dental school. The time was extensive but worth every second. The program opened my eyes to the type of work ethic and drive that is needed to succeed in this industry. While in dental school, I married my high school sweetheart and are excited to announce we are soon expecting our first child.

I am very excited about my growing family, budding dental career and pursuit to become a new business owner. My father is encouraging a startup practice; however, I first want to look into the potential of partnering with an existing practice that may be available. The intention of this letter is to see if you have any interest in meeting in person, allowing me to share my transition goals and see if there is a fit either with you or anyone in the community you may know. My professional goals include returning with my family to the southern California area and working in a private practice setting. Joining a practice like yours offers an exciting experience for me to utilize my skills and knowledge; while learning under the wing of an experienced doctor how a successful practice should be run.

Below is my personal cell phone and email. If you have interest in connecting, I would love the opportunity to meet you in person. I will be visiting my family on the week of July 8th and would hope we could connect then.

Have a great day and I look forward to meeting you.

With regards,

John Smith
